The big return: Christmas presents sent back on Christmas Day

– First return took place at 7.38am in Stirlingshire on Christmas Day –

– Last collection took place at 10.43pm in Middlesex on Christmas Eve –

26 December 2012 - While many of us were still unwrapping presents or peeling the sprouts, some Brits had already started to return unwanted presents on Christmas Day morning.

CollectPlus, the modern alternative to the Post Office, has revealed that the first return was made at 7.38am at the SPAR store in Airth, Stirlingshire, in Scotland.

With over 5,000 stores in its network, including convenience stores and garage forecourts which are often open on Christmas Day, the CollectPlus service allows customers to drop off unwanted presents for return to the retailers at any time or day of the year.

Although some were already returning gifts, others were taking advantage of their CollectPlus store's late opening hours right up to Christmas, with the last parcel collection recorded at 10.43pm at the Esso service station in Hanworth, Middlesex, on Christmas Eve.

Mark Lewis, CEO of CollectPlus, said: "No matter how hard we try to buy the perfect gift for friends and family, it is inevitable that something will need returning or exchanging. Rather than waiting until the shops re-open after the festive break, popping to your local convenience shop or garage forecourt to return items is quick and easy, even on Christmas Day.

"For many the festive season is an exciting but busy time of the year so shopping online for presents has never been more popular. In fact, our recent research revealed that almost nine out of ten Brits (87 per cent) said they were planning to shop online this Christmas, whilst over one quarter (27 per cent) intended to do more online than last year. We saw an increase in the number of people opting to have their online presents delivered to one of our stores this year and take advantage of being able to collect them right up until the last minute."
