

The changing fabric of Britain's Christmas stockings

Average stocking shrinks over last decade while computer games replace books

Watford, 20 December 2010: Research released today by parcel service CollectPlus reveals that the average number of presents in a child's Christmas stocking has fallen over the last decade<sup>1</sup>. Shedding light on the modern family Christmas, CollectPlus, which allows shoppers to collect and deliver parcels from their local corner shop, has found that children today receive an average of 12 presents in their Christmas stocking compared with a high of 17 presents a decade ago. However, stockings are still double the size they were fifty years ago.

Over the last half century, puzzles and chocolate have remained perennially popular choices for Santa to stuff stockings with. However, books, traditionally a top three present, have been overtaken by clothing and electronic toys in recent years. This Christmas, after edible items, children are most likely to be pulling DVDs and video games from their stockings.

The research also reveals how the search for the must-have gift has become less stressful thanks to the impact of online shopping and a wider choice on the high street. In contrast to their experience as a child, when over half (57%) of adults recall missing out on the 'must have gift', today's parents believe online shopping is the top factor in making present buying less stressful, closely followed by a wider choice on the high street and simpler returns processes.

Mark Lewis, CEO of CollectPlus (the joint venture between PayPoint and Yodel), comments:

"Even though times are tight and high streets slippery with ice, home shopping via the internet and catalogues means more children than ever will find Santa has delivered a stocking packed with surprises this Christmas. The internet makes it easier for everyone, from elves to elderly relatives, to find the perfect present for a loved one, whilst innovative delivery services and effective returns ensure fewer tears on Christmas morning than ever before."

Secret Santa

The survey finds that almost two thirds of presents (61%) are stashed away from children’s prying in a cupboard, and around a quarter (24%) in the loft. A dedicated fifth (22%) go so far as to store gifts in inventive places such as a neighbour’s house or a shed to prevent children from discovering the loot. This is especially true in Wales and the South West, where a neighbour’s house is the hiding place of choice for secretive parents. This compares to three-quarters of respondents in Scotland who like to keep the presents out of a reach in a cupboard.

The slimmest stockings this Christmas are to be found in the Midlands with an average two fewer gifts than children from the North of England, who can expect to receive 14 presents in their stocking this year. However, it is Scottish parents who are most likely to remember the bitter sting of tears from missing out on the ‘must have gift’, such as this year’s Buzz Lightyear, when they were younger because it was too expensive.

Dan Rubel, Woolworths.co.uk Marketing Director, said:

“There’s been a huge rise in electronic toys over the past decade but traditional favourites such as Lego remain ever popular. This Christmas, at Woolworths.co.uk, we are anticipating that out of the thousands of toys we have available online, Buzz Lightyear will be the most popular gift for children. Finding the ‘must have gift’ can be stressful for parents, but our online superstore is currently offering speedy deliveries and free returns on online orders, hopefully making Christmas shopping easier than ever.”
